Charlie sets out in a tub to cross the ocean.

He spies the periscope of a submarine, and drawing close to it, places the picture of a big ship against the periscope glass. The Hun commander, looking into the sightseeing instrument, mistakes the picture ship for a real one. He sends a torpedo toward it. Charlie grasps the torpedo before it is well started and steers it back at the submarine, which is blown up.

Charlie gets to France by hanging to the feet of a huge stork. He makes his way to the German front, captures a gun and conquers Huns right and left. When he punctures a particularly fat Boche with his bayonet, air escapes and the Hun becomes Skinny. "Reducing the German front," says Charlie. Wearing the uniform and helmet of one of his victims, Charlie reaches the Kaiser. He straightway captures his Hun majesty.
